When Carl Meyers passed away in November, Lexingtonians were devastated to lose a much-loved member of the community and an icon in the local fashion scene. Many wondered who would take over his store, located on Clay Avenue.

Neil and Sherri Mosley are approaching their one year anniversary as the new owners of the store. They are thrilled with the level of support they have received over this past year. “We have met many loyal clients of Carl’s and have also discovered new ones,” said Sherri. “Everyone has been very complimentary of the direction the store is going.”

When Sherri was asked what her biggest challenge had been so far she replied, “Transitioning from working in the non-profit world to owning a local tradition and jewel.” She was nervous about taking the helm of such a well-known local brand. “We knew this was a unique, special store and we wanted to maintain its reputation while also putting our twist on it to keep it relevant and approachable for everyone,” she explained.

“Carl’s eye for elegant and sophisticated style is still evident in the clothing lines carried in our store, including lines from Paris, Italy, Barcelona and Canada—the same lines that customers have come to know and love,” Sherri said. In addition to offering contemporary elegant styles, the specialty women’s boutique also offers exceptional personalized styling services and complimentary alterations.

“We love working with women to find the right style of clothing that makes them feel beautiful, confident and empowered. We want everyone who comes into our store to feel welcome and special.”
